Summary of reasons for decision:

The text file contains information about mixing chemicals to make a poisonous gasses and warnings about the consequences of doing so. While the possession or use of such gasses is an offence under New Zealand law, there is nothing in the text file that details how or where the weapons might be used. Further, the likelihood of successfully making these gasses from the information provided is doubtful. The publication therefore cannot seriously be considered promotional or encouraging of crime. However, the unrestricted availability of the publication is still likely to be injurious to the public good. Children and young people, who are in the process of developing their cognitive abilities, are at risk of attempting to make the bombs without taking adequate precautions, or fully understanding the consequences of doing so. Adults, on the other hand, are likely to have the maturity and experience to understand the warnings, and appreciate the physical risks and potential legal ramifications of doing so. They are likely to exhibit appropriate caution and take steps to mitigate any potential harm. Therefore, the text file is restricted to those aged 18 and over, as this is a justified limitation on the right to freedom of expression contained in the New Zealand Bill of Rights Act 1990 in order to prevent injury to the public good.
